CARACOL MAYA RUINS TOUR

Caracol is the largest Maya Ruins in Belize and one of the best destinations for adventure travel in Belize. Situated approximately 25 miles south of Xunantunich, in the foothills of the Maya Mountains, the site was first reported by a native logger named Rosa Mai, who came across its remains in 1937 while searching for mahogany hardwood trees.

Take a winding path through the Mountain Pine Ridge and later dense broad leaf forests to the ancient city of Caracol and discover more than 40 monuments, some of them dating back to 1,200 BC. Enjoy the beauty and serenity of this place, which once was one of the largest Maya cities. And if you can, make sure you climb the myriad steep temple steps and be amazed at the views of Belize's untamed jungle. Learn about the Ceiba tree, the tree the Mayas called "The Tree of Life" and their belief that its roots would take them to the underworld and their branches to the high heavens. Though monumental architecture at the site dates back as far as the 4th century BC, the city reached its apogee during the Classic Period, 200 to 900 AD. During this time, it dominated much of the Maya region politically, economically and militarily, while interacting with other areas throughout Mesoamerica and the great metropolis of Teotihuacan in the distant valley of Mexico. CAHAL PECH MAYA RUINS

Cahal Pech, whose Maya name means “Place of The Ticks”, contains some evidence of some of the earliest Maya settlements in Belize. Data recovered at the center indicates that the first settlers began to occupy the site somewhere between 1200 and 1000 BC. Excavation during the past 12 years suggest that during the Classic Period, Cahal Pech and its sustaining area may have encompassed a realm of around 10 square miles. Cahal Pech also contains one of the earliest stela (monument) yet discovered in this region of the Maya Lowlands.

Cahal Pech was once a palace home for an elite Mayan family. This ceremonial center includes pyramid temples, palaces and a ball court. It is one of the oldest recognizably Maya sites in western Belize, resting high on the banks of the Macal River. The site was abandoned in the 9th century AD for unknown reasons. Cahal Pech is now an archaeological park which houses a small museum with artifacts from various ongoing excavations.
